

MUMMY'S CURSE STRIKES AGAIN

By I.M. Seaton

For the second and third time in two days the mummy's curse has struck. Only a day after the horrific murder of Mr. Daniel Hansford, the daughter of famed Egyptologist. Dr. Edwin Caruthers, Anne has been kidnapped by unnamed fiends. The same fiends seem to have been responsible for the destruction of the mummy of the ancient princess Neferette. The display area at the British Museum was in shambles, with bits and pieces of the princess' mummy covering the floor. No blood was found at the scene however.

The Doctor's daughter, Anne, is ten years old, and was born in Egypt where her mother died in childbirth. The little girl left behind only a special doll dressed as a princess of Egypt that she had had since she was a small girl. Doctor Caruthers was shocked at the disappearance of his daughter, and even more that she would leave the toy behind.

Detective Inspector Ethan Winchester who was at the scene investigating Mr. Hansford's demise was sadly unaware that the professor's daughter was being napped on his watch. Neither the constables at the scene nor the museum's security saw hide nor hair of the little girl or her abductors.

There is no doubt that the three crimes are interlaced, said one unnamed witness. It is the mummy's curse. Why else would a healthy man like Daniel Hansford have gone into his death in the manner that he did. The same witness said that a beautiful woman with dark hair and Egyptian make up was seen on the walkway above the obelisk that ended Mr. Hansford's life. As of yet, no one has been able to identify this strange woman.